A MAN calls home to tell his wife he's been invited on a fishing trip by his boss, leaving immediately.

He says: "This is a good opportunity for me to get that promotion I've been wanting."

"Could you pack enough clothes for a week, put in my new pyjamas and sort my fishing gear?"

The wife thinks this sounds a bit fishy but does as she is told.

When he comes home his wife asks if he caught many fish.

He says: "Yes! I caught the biggest fish of the week and my boss was impressed. But why didn't you pack my pyjamas?"

The wife replies: "I did, they're in your tackle box."

£10 LETTER

SO George Best is going to have a welcome home party when he leaves hospital (Daily Star, November 11).

I would like to think that out of respect to the people who have nursed him back to health, he might be able to stay off the booze.

Unfortunately I think that I, and Bestie's millions of fans, will be let down once again.

KEITH GRAHAM, Manchester.

IT warmed my heart to read the story of Phones4U boss John Caudwell, who is set to make £1billion selling the company.

He may not have been an angel along the way, what with his "sex fest", but it's refreshing to see that rags-to-riches dreams come true.

ROB MATTHEWS, Bath.

THE way things are going, it can't be long until they make it an offence to be a straight, Christian, middle-class couple living in this country.

Why are the powers that be worrying about offending the minorities when the steps taken end up offending the majorities?

BILLY POTTER, Norwich.

Three women tell of their lives as gangsters' molls

Married to the MOB

SHOW these girls respect – or you just might end up regretting it.

They may look like ordinary women, but one false move and you could end up wearing concrete boots.

That's because these three lasses are gangsters' molls. And they're connected to some of the most dangerous villains in the world.

They enjoy a life full of diamonds and luxury, just like they do in the movies.

Think of sexy Drea De Matteo, 33, who stars as Adriana De Cerva in The Sopranos, or Ginger McKenna in the hit mafia movie Casino, played by Sharon Stone, 47. But for all the bling and luxury,

■ by KATE JACKSON

there's a downside to being the dutiful wife of a hardened criminal.

A new show on Five tonight uncovers the hidden world of today's gangsters' molls and exposes the way women must behave if they become part of The Firm.

Strife

Presented by Ronnie Kray's widow, Kate, the show gives a fascinating glimpse of the ups and downs of being the trouble and strife to a real-life hood.

So sit down and behave yourselves, as we take a trip through the underworld...

● Gangsters' Wives is on Five tonight at 11pm.

'They said I had to show off my legs'

FLANAGAN is the undertaker to the gangster world. She may be in her 60s, but her contacts read like a Who's Who of the underworld. She even buried the Krays.

Reggie Kray was so besotted with her he proposed three times, but she refused.

"Reggie noticed the legs first, of course!" jokes Flanagan. "I was doing a lot of modelling and TV work, like The Benny Hill Show."

"I could never visit him in trousers. They specified that I'd go in a mink coat and lots of diamonds. That's what they like to be seen with on their arms."

Flirting

She adds: "Maybe I should have married Reggie, but he'd have given me so much aggravation. As a gangster's wife you can't go to the bar, or dance with anyone else."

"You were allowed to sit with the other wives and smoke. And that was it."

"If there was a little 18-year-old there, the girlfriend of a gangster's son, and she was being a bit loud or flirting with someone else, then I'd have to tell her to behave."

"I've seen the most dreadful things happen to flirts. If you didn't know the rules you soon learned."

'He has this look, he is the smiling viper'

AMAYA Wilson, 36, has been with doorman and hardman Steve Knock just over a year.

Steve makes sure his girlfriend wants for nothing, yet Amaya continues to work as a sales representative.

For Christmas she has asked for a boob job and a Mercedes!

"I had no idea who Steve was when I met him," admits Amaya.

"Slowly I started to notice things. Whenever we went – it didn't matter if it was the back end of nowhere – there was always someone who knew him."

"Everyone we met had the utmost respect for Steve. We didn't ever have a conversa-

WORRY: Amaya Wilson

with a smile on his face. Never be fooled by that viper's smile."

She adds: "The best thing about living this life is the holidays. We're always away."

But the downside is the risk that Steve will get hurt. He's already been stabbed twice and even survived after being shot in the head.

Amaya, of Hartley, Kent, says: "I worry I'll come home and something will have happened to him."

"I look at him sometimes and think of the things he gets up to, and I think to myself, 'Don't die on me babe.'

"But you can't live life like that. We just go along as we are."

Tough

"He's a big, tough guy, but he's a pussycat underneath. He has this look though."

"He can have a row

DANGER: Kate Kray

'Ron's rivals made threats to kill me'

KATE Kray, 49, was married to one half of the world's most notorious gangster duo – Ronnie Kray.

She met him while taking letters to him in Broadmoor hospital. She married him in 1989 and was with him until he died in 1995.

It wasn't exactly a normal marriage – her husband was gay, schizophrenic and a murderer. But Kate, who now lives in Eastbourne with her new husband Leo O'Reilly, says: "Ronnie had such an aura. He was so charismatic."

In the show, Kate talks to other gangsters' wives about the ups and downs of being in love with a criminal. She explains: "Yes, there's the glamour and the bling. But the flip side is you might spend half your life outside Pentonville prison."

Upset

"I went to Broadmoor for 10 years – and I hadn't done anything wrong."

She adds: "I was in danger on several occasions. There were rival people who had upset Ronnie and had threatened to kill me."

"It's a very dangerous world. I've witnessed the most horrendous things."

WHAT'S HOT TO WATCH TODAY

THE dilemma faced by the bloke in tonight's ITV drama, WALK AWAY AND I STUMBLE (9pm), is one which will no doubt be sadly familiar to millions of married men. Should he stay with his wife, to whom he's been faithful for 13 happy years, or shack up for regular sex with Tamzin Outhwaite?

As it happens, this chap (played by Mark Strong), decides he doesn't need to think about it for very long, and by the middle of tonight's opening episode (it finishes tomorrow at the same time), he's turned his back on his poor wife (Julie Graham), along with their three kids, in favour of a regular bunk-up with Ian Beale's ex. But Tamzin, known for the purposes of the story as Claire, turns out to come with a fair bit of baggage.

Not only has her ex suddenly reappeared on the scene (he dumped her to go travelling) but she keeps getting these disturbingly bad headaches...

MEANWHILE, it's the start of HOLLYOAKS (Channel 4, 6.30pm) as Justin goes on trial for the murder of racist scumbag Macki. He's innocent, of course, but you can't help but fear that the jury will consist of the usual bunch of gullible thickies who tend to get called up for soap trials.

FINALLY, tonight's modern day Shakespeare adaptation is MACBETH (BBC1, 8.30pm). He's now the head chef in a London restaurant.

STAR TV GUIDE

MATT BAYLIS

...ON LAST NIGHT'S TV

MORE than forty light years away, half in frozen darkness, half in permanent sunlight, lies the planet Aurelia. Discovered by the most sophisticated space-travelling telescope, Aurelia is the closest planet to us that's able to support life.

If you're wondering why this news isn't on today's front page, relax. The telescope hasn't been launched yet. Aurelia hasn't been found. But one day, scientists believe within the next 10 years, it could be.

ALIEN WORLDS (Saturday, C4), combined the expertise of boffins with cutting-edge techniques in computer animation, to give us an eye-popping glimpse of what life on other planets might look like. The result is like a cross between Sesame Street and a 1970s album cover. A forest of roasted turkeys topped with fuchsia-pink lampshades squelches its way through a sea of gravy. The golpop, a kind of muppet-ostrich-camel, watches for sudden changes of atmosphere with its third eye. The mudpod, which looks like an armoured beaver, carves out rivers and lagoons with its snout.

Science
It may sound as if the programme-makers ate some rather strange mushrooms before they started work. But this wacky vision of other worlds is based on solid science.

The experts carefully calculated what a planet would need to support life, and what that life might look like. Some bits are not so strange. They reckon all planets need water, for example, and every creature, no matter how much it looks like something from The Lord of the Rings, ends up moving, breathing and seeing in the same way as the more boring life-forms here on Planet Earth.

This looks like being a fascinating series. But some of us might think there are enough mysteries back home that need solving before we go exploring strange, new worlds.

A good example is Alien Worlds' ultra-serious and very believable presenter, Dr Armand Leroi. Where did he come from? Does he ever smile? Is he, in fact, a distant relative of Mr Spock?

Just Jane

Cancer lie was wicked

I TOLD an old friend I'd had cancer because I wanted her to feel sorry for me.

It was a wicked and downright lie and I feel so ashamed of myself.

She keeps ringing up to ask how I am and I feel sick to the pit of my stomach every time I squeak "fine".

It all started when we bumped into each other in the supermarket.

We hadn't seen each other in years. She was looking amazing – all expensive blonde highlights and designer gear, while I looked overweight and rough.

I felt so embarrassed I just blurted out: "I'm sorry I'm not looking my best. I'm just getting over cancer, you know?"

I don't know why I said it but now it's opened up this horrible can of worms.

She keeps ringing me and wants to hold charity coffee mornings in my name. I keep thinking something terrible should happen to me to pay me back.

JANE SAYS There's no getting away from the fact you made one hell of a mistake. Being flip-pant about something as cruel as cancer is never acceptable.

I suggest you make the effort to go and see your friend and explain that there's been a terrible misunderstanding.

Explain that you have been feeling unwell lately and worried that you might have cancer.

But reassure her that you're in the clear.

That said, it's possible from the way you've been acting that you could be suffering from anxiety or depression, so go and see your GP and ask for help.

FAMILY'S SNUB OVER SEX BAN

I'VE managed to cause a major family row simply by laying down a few ground rules.

Now my husband's family is threatening to boycott our house this Christmas.

My sister-in-law has slammed the phone down on me more than once and my niece (her daughter) says I'm sexually retarded.

Our drama started in the summer when my brother asked if my 17-year-old niece could come and stay with us. We're currently living in London and he thought that she'd benefit from the experience.

Eventually he dropped me an e-mail explaining she'd be arriving on January 3 for six weeks.

I replied with a few pointers. I made it clear I expected the girl to make the best use of her time.

She was to get up by 9.30am each day and spend her time studying, visiting places of interest or working.

Our telephone was to be out of bounds, except for emergencies, and she was to use her own mobile to call friends. Plus no texting at the table – my pet hate.

Furious

As I wasn't planning to charge her for her stay, she would be expected to help with the washing up, baby-sit and generally pitch in.

And she was NOT to bring male friends back or have sex with her boyfriend under my roof.

But now her mum has gone absolutely ballistic. She's furious with me for daring to suggest her precious daughter should work or help around my house.

Apparently, the girl's boyfriend virtually lives in her bedroom and she thinks I've got a damn cheek for daring to take the moral high ground.

My mum-in-law says the family plans to avoid me this Christmas and not send my kids any toys.

All I was trying to do was make things clear for everyone. But I've put my foot in it and I'm being portrayed as a frigid spoilsport.

JANE SAYS: Look, this is your home and you're entitled to lay down whichever rules you feel are appropriate.

Believe me, I'm with you all the way. If you don't want an unmotivated 17-year-old flopping round your house and spending hours on your phone, then you are fully entitled to say so.

As for slapping a ban on teenage sex, then good for you. You've stayed true to your principles. How is that taking the moral high ground?

My feeling is you've had a lucky escape on the niece and the Christmas front.

So the spoilt brat isn't coming – what a relief.

And you don't have to buy gifts for nit-picking relatives.

Sounds like a result to me. I'm sure that your own children won't even notice that they're a couple of presents down. What are you planning for next year?

Ex has turned stalker

I WAS amazed that my boyfriend took it so well when I told him I wanted to split.

I thought that he'd go mad – but instead he simply said, "OK", and walked away.

For two weeks things were great. I started going out with my mates and even kissed a guy in a nightclub.

But then the phone calls started. At first he was friendly. He asked how I was and suggested going for a drink "as friends".

Then, when I turned him down a dozen times, he started getting nasty.

He would call at all times of the day and night and hiss that I was ugly, fat and stupid.

In the end my dad got on the phone and told him to clear off.

But lately I've noticed him hanging around outside my work.

I hear that he's got a new girlfriend now but he is still stalking me. I'm terrified and don't know what to do.

JANE SAYS: Go back to your father and tell him about this latest development.

You need someone strong and reliable to help you at this scary time.

Don't be too proud to admit that you're frightened and need help.

Your former boyfriend may enjoy intimidating you but he's not above the law and needs to be reported and dealt with.

I suggest you write down everything that has happened so far – dates, confrontations, abusive calls and incidents of stalking.

Take the whole lot, along with your dad, to the police and make a formal complaint.

(Calls cost 60p per minute from a BT landline)

THUG'S HOLD ON MY FELLA

My boyfriend is under the influence of a local thug.

I'm absolutely terrified for our safety. This guy makes my fella hide stuff in our cellar for him and sell stolen goods.

We've even had undesirables hiding out in our loft for days.

Apparently this villain reckons that my fella "owes him".

About 10 years ago my boyfriend was involved in a crime – but he refuses to give me the full details.

My bloke got away but his accomplice went to prison.

Now this con insists that my boyfriend has a debt to pay, but the stress is killing our relationship.

JANE SAYS: Your boyfriend has no choice – he must give himself up. If he's committed a crime, then he must do the time.

His former accomplice has a terrible hold over him. He's making him commit even more crimes, because he feels it's "pay-back time".

Your relationship is never going to recover until he wipes the slate clean. Turning a blind eye to what's going on in your house could also leave you open to arrest.

Time is money, and you don't have much of both. But expect breaks, and not just on the cash front. One relationship is going to work this year.

MERCURY the Messenger of the Planets suddenly alters direction, making it clear that a meeting will take place – but in a different setting. A bit of derring-do is required, though you can't go flying about all over the place today. Nor can you back out of a deal without causing problems. To see where your general interest lies, call...

DAILY STAR Mobiles

The majority of mobile phone users in the UK want to be able to send and receive emails via their handsets, but they also want to be able to control who they receive emails from, and don't want to have to pay a fortune for the service.

A consumer survey, carried out by mobile software firm Critical Path, identified a potential market of more than 16 million consumers in the UK who want mobile email.

The research found that 54 per cent of consumers said access to mobile emails from their friends was most important, and unsurprisingly, it revealed that the most unpopular person to receive email from during personal time is the boss - they would rather hear from an ex-boyfriend or ex-girlfriend.

However, more than half (56 per cent) said they would feel out of touch with friends and family without email access for just a single week.

The survey also found that 88 per cent of those who responded to the survey still check their email for messages from family and friends while on holiday, highlighting just how important mobile email communication has become in everyday life.

Mike Serbinis, chief technology officer at Critical Path, said: "Consumers want an affordable service that is easy to use, works on their current phone, and can deliver messages from their current email account. Operators who offer a simple, affordable mobile email service that allows consumers to use their current phone and choose the messages that matter will reap the biggest rewards."

Our consumer guide to the latest mobile phones in the market place

The survey also revealed that less than half (48 per cent) of mobile phone users were aware of whether or not their handset actually had email capabilities.

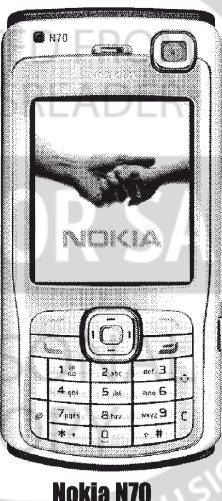

Most of the current handsets are perfectly geared up for email. The new Nokia N70, which comes with a 2 megapixel camera, video calling, and Bluetooth wireless connectivity, also has built-in e-mail capability that allows users to send text, pictures or voice clips to any other e-mail address, to another Nokia N70, or to another MMS-capable phone.

The Motorola ROKR, one of the latest music phones, also allows users to read, write and send emails, from virtually anywhere, just as easily as if they were sending them from a desktop computer.

Mobile Express is currently offering the Nokia N70 free on 3 with 500 any time any network minutes and 100 texts per month. The monthly line rental of £30 per month has been reduced to half price line rental for eight months, on an 18-month contract, making a saving of £120.00.
